

There are many challenges and questions that come along with being a parent. Many of those questions as children grow relate to their behavior. Their ability to listen, to follow directions, to sit still, to focus on school and home work become more of a concern as children grow and progress through the education system. Question relating to ADHD, learning disabilities, defiant behavior and wondering what is within normal limits and what needs further investigating worries parents.

Please call our office with any questions relating to your child's behavior at home, school or on the playground. Based on that conversation we may direct you to complete certain diagnostic forms at www.chadis.com. These forms will ask you and teachers a variety of questions to help our physicians better understand your concerns. If your child has been diagnosed with ADHD or you specifically want your child evaluated for ADHD please review our ADHD appointment policy.

If our physician feels an ADHD evaluation is needed based on your concerns, we will refer you to www.chadis.com, you will register your child and complete the DSM-PC form. Additionally you and your child's teachers will complete the Vanderbilt initial evaluation questionnaires which can be found on our website in the Patient Center section.

Please call our office at least 2mos in advance for annual physicals and at least 2 weeks in advance for ADHD evals and med checks
